

FOREWORD

Countless books and studies have been written and completed about religion and its effect on human society throughout the course of earth's history. Nothing has affected human thought and action more than religion. Nothing has caused more heartache and pain than religion. Religion has caused innumerable and incomprehensible wars that have resulted in the loss of an immeasurable amount of human life. Religion causes intimate personal depression that results in emotional guilt, misery, and uncertainty about one's self-worth and value.

Religion's Negative Influence

In spite of all the empirical and clear evidence of religion's negative affect on the mortal human race, nothing is more powerful and nothing is more widely employed in the pursuit of happiness than religion. The human search for happiness and value is the core fuel that powers the course of human events upon this earth. And it's in this search for happiness and value that religion performs its greatest role. Religion has centralized itself in, and has become the most effective and powerful energy in the human mind.

Religion cannot be defined and limited to organized belief systems that are generally classified as the world's main religions. Joining the religion of Christianity, Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism, other prominent "isms" and their offshoots, is a new age of spiritualism, psychics, channelers, astrologists, and others engaged in activities focused on the search for happiness and self-worth.

Science Is A Religion

Not to be outdone by these orthodoxly defined movements, science is also a religion. Science joins religion in the search for happiness and value, which comes from the perception of understanding versus the negative implication of ignorance. Its scientists and researchers become "published" gurus in their own right. Famous scientists throughout history have become its prophets, revelators, seers, and ministers. Science quotes its own and accepts its theories and postulations with the same affection and honor by which other religions accept their prophets and teachers and quote from their own scriptures. Scientific publications are its scriptures. Scientific theory and religious belief are semantically intertwined and cannot escape the implications of their inability to provide absolute certainty and real truth conclusions. Yet, both provide the follower with certain emotional values of the illusion of happiness and self-worth. Whether receiving an accredited university degree or receiving a certificate of baptism, thus being "saved," both are emotionally-charged perceptions that are no more valuable to the reality of self-worth and happiness than the degree that they are accepted as such by the recipient.

Philosophy

Both religion and science can be properly defined under the general term of Philosophy. “Philosophy” is best defined as: the study of the fundamental nature of knowledge, reality, and existence. Throughout this book, all philosophy of every nature and kind will be termed, “the philosophies of men.” The male gender has been chiefly responsible for the study of human nature, and men the progenitors of both religion and science. Women should not take offense to this definition. Nothing the philosophies of men have created upon this earth has led to happiness and individual self-worth. On the contrary, when the real truth is revealed of how the philosophies of men first started and why they were supported and perpetuated by men, women will gladly disavow their role in philosophy’s historical development.

The philosophies of men mingled with “their scripture” are responsible for the devastating amount of human misery and tragedy to which the human race has been exposed throughout the history of this earth. The atomic age with its destruction, fear, and paranoia has been just as damaging to the pursuit of happiness and self-worth as the belief in a jealous and vindictive God who only saves His own people and destroys those who do not accept or believe in Him. From the relatively little-known scientific “scripture” written by Robert Hooke and Max Planck to the more popular “prophecies” of Einstein and Oppenheimer, the first atomic bomb was created and has destroyed or threatens the majority of the human race. Not to be outdone by nuclear threat and destruction are the writings and actions attributed to the prophet Mohammed of the Islam faith and to Pope Urban II of Christianity. The Muslim Wars and Christian Crusades started “holy wars” (jihad) that have created both internal and external hatred between humans that linger to the current day.

Human nature is responsible for these philosophies and the tragedies that they cause. From the first time that mortals began to wonder about their existence and call upon an outside, invisible, unknown force to answer the questions about their reality, their innate human nature has deceived and misled them. The lingering question of who we are, why do we exist, where did we come from, and where do we go after we die circumvent all other emotional activities of the human mind. Humans have always struggled for the necessities of life and have competed with each other for the limited resources of the earth. But the struggle within is responsible for the most problematic emotional affect<sup>1</sup> on happiness. Ironically, if one doesn’t know the answers and cannot find them within, it suggests that that person is flawed intellectually or in some other way predisposed to ignorance. But the questions still linger and the search for an answer remains foremost in the mind. Is there someone else who might know the answers? Does there exist a messenger sent from the source of all knowledge to provide the answers? “If I don’t know, then who does?”

The Enmity of the Human Consciousness

This enmity of human nature compels the search for knowledge and understanding. There’s a constant battle between the conscious and subconscious mind. Humans know that they are different than any other animal upon earth, and subconsciously they recognize this difference, but they don’t understand why or how they became so different. This enmity, or cognitive dissonance, compels them to figure it out.

In the search for the answers, the sincere and honest ones, who admit the lack of knowledge, become susceptible to the philosophies of men mingled with scripture. Humans place an important value on knowing and having the innate questions about their existence answered. And when they can’t figure out the answers for themselves, unscrupulous men, knowing of the intrinsic value and continual longing for answers, set the price for which the value of knowledge is bargained. The one who provides the answers is allowed to set the price that is charged. And like everything else in a world in which you can buy anything for money, the searcher will pay just about anything for the answers, if convinced that the answers are of worth. The answers to the questions have become a commodity that one can purchase, sell, trade, and negotiate for in other terms. The unscrupulous ones have become the merchants of knowledge. Because of the enmity within the human mind, these merchants have taken the treasures of the earth, and with gold and silver they have bought up armies and navies, popes and priests, and reign with blood and horror on the earth.

The Gods of Religion and Mythology Are Not Real

The gods created by the philosophies of men mingled with scripture are not real. But their power over the human mind certainly is! From the moment that a sincere inquirer of truth in submissiveness prostrates upon the earth and asks for guidance, “Oh God, hear the words of my mouth; Oh God, hear the words of my mouth. Oh God, here the words of my mouth,” that one becomes vulnerable to being answered by the only “god of this world”: oneself. But the answers do not come from within from oneself, obviously from the act of asking because one doesn’t know. The sincere seeker is looking for someone outside of their own consciousness to bring them the answers. “I am looking for messengers.” Once open to the possibility that another human might have the answers, the inquirer is presented with various preachers who preach a religion made of the philosophies of men mingled with scripture. Unfortunately, most fall under the spell of these false messengers who don't have any better understanding of the real truth than the supplicant who pays them for an understanding. False messengers' pay comes in a wide variety of forms. Most receive actual money or other relevant material goods for their services. But ALL receive a payment that is more enticing than all the money in the world: power over, prestige and accolade-laced value from their followers.

Real Truth Is Not Found Anywhere

The darkness of ignorance permeates every corner of the earth. The real truth is not found anywhere. The real truth is the undisputable reality of things as they have always been, as they are, and as they will always be into the future. Anything that was once believed but has since been proven false was not real truth. Any so-called "truth" that is accepted today that might be proven false in the future is not real truth. Real truth does not change, it cannot. "Light" can be described as a reflection of real truth. This book allegorically uses the sun's light and its unchanging form or energy as it has been in the past, as it is today, and as it will be in the future, as a reflection of unchangeable real truth. The moon reflects the light of the sun to a darkened world. In and of itself, the moon is nothing without the sun. The same moon that reflected the light of the sun in the past, reflects that same light today, and will reflect the same light in the future. A true messenger is figuratively described throughout this book as "the Moon" that gives the light of real truth to a darkened, ignorant world.

A True Messenger

An important question to consider is if there truly existed a true messenger in the past, does there exist one today, and will there exist one in the future. Was there a mortal who understood real truth and was properly commissioned to share it with the rest of the world? If so, how was that one commissioned? Who was that one? How did that one share his message with the world? And most important, how can we trust that the one claiming to be a true messenger is not deceiving us like so many false messengers with their philosophies of men mingled with scripture have in the past and do today?

There's a litmus test for a true messenger. It's a test that is easily applied by anyone in search of the answers to the human question. Do the answers given make complete sense? Can they be disputed within reason and basic human intelligence, i.e., common sense? Do the answers lead to another question, or does the given answer solve the human desire to know? Also, how much do the answers cost? Does the claimant, the true messenger, require payment, either monetarily or in other value such as accolade, title, or respect? A true messenger has his emotional and material needs sufficiently provided for and does not expect nor accept anything beyond what he already has. A true messenger does not establish an organized religion or movement or place himself above any other human being.

The basis of real truth upon which his message is predicated is two-fold:

1. All humans are equally powerful and possess equal free will to act and be acted upon by this free will. No other forces control a human being outside of the individual. There is no compelling outside source that has the ability to control the human mind. The mind is controlled by the power of the individual.

2. All humans are equal in their capacity to know and understand real truth. Thus, no human is above or below another, or possesses an emotional advantage in any way regardless of what physical and/or environmental limitations define the human experience.

The Equality of All Humans

The real truth creates human equality. Everyone is right, which makes everyone wrong. Everyone is special, which makes none more special than another. NO HUMAN BEING KNOWS ANY MORE REAL TRUTH THAN ANY OTHER. From the moment that we are born into this world as infants, we are on the same level of opportunity to know and understand the real truth, but none of us do. The evidence of our mortal infantile ignorance proves unquestionably that we were not meant to know the real truth while existing upon this earth. We can certainly invent our own truths (the philosophies of men mingled with scripture as explained above) while we go throughout life, but we cannot know real truth, which is a complete understanding of who we are, why we exist, where did we come from, and where are we destined to go after death. No infant knows the answers to these questions. And no adult does either. The veil of ignorance is universal and constant. But why? Why don't we know? Is it possible to know?

False Messengers

The introduction of false messengers—preachers trained in the ministry of the philosophies of men mingled with scriptures—set a course for an unfair advantage during our mortal experience upon this earth. We are each born into a false belief system. And because it is impossible to find the answers by ourselves, we either remain loyal to the false belief system or find ourselves forever engaged in an internal emotional battle (enmity) in search of our own answers that make sense. The appearance of false messengers forced the introduction of true messengers in order to level the playing field of the mortal experience. If we are forced into a false belief system, and it is beyond our free will to refuse the teachings and traditional beliefs of our parents, then in all fairness, there must be a condition that exists where, if we so choose, we can find the real truth. That is, if there is an actual purpose for human life upon this earth.

The Purpose of This Book

In order for one to take this book in hand and study it to its intended end and purpose—receiving a disclosure of real truth about religion, science, and philosophy unlike any other book ever written before it, or will ever be written after it—one must be willing to consider things that the people of the world do not know nor accept as part of their perceived paradigm of belief and knowledge. One must be willing to consider that there have been things hid up from the foundation of the world. However, if the reader is in agreement that real truth does not exist upon the earth, and that one applies common sense, then that one can be more easily compelled to consider the following real truths about our existence as human beings:

The Big Bang Theory vs. God

The best theory that the greatest scientific minds in the world have produced is the postulation that billions years ago the beginning of all existence came from the cataclysmic explosion of a small volume of matter at extremely high density and temperature. Religious Creationists counter with the idea that an all-powerful god created everything that exists. The questions produced from the two ideas are insurmountable and confusing to common sense. If a cataclysmic explosion of a small volume of matter was responsible for creation, then where did the “small volume of matter” come from and what energy source was responsible for the matter reacting in the way that it did? And if God created everything, then who created God?

The real truth lies between the two ideas and destroys each basic premise. What we know for sure is that human beings exist. We know that the human form is a compendium of matter that has the ability to act and be acted upon in the environment in which it finds itself. Humans have the ability to command energy within the contained environment of a physical body that produces both chemical and physical reactions<sup>2</sup>. The human mind calls upon an unexplained phenomenal energy called thought to create a physical action. One thinks about opening and closing the hand. Thinking is a conscious

<sup>2</sup> A chemical change (chemical reaction) is a change of materials into other, new materials with different properties, and one or more new substances are formed. Physical change is the opposite of a chemical change. Physical changes are a change in which no new substances are formed, and the substance which is changed is the same.

act that science cannot explain. Thinking creates the chemical reaction within the brain that is responsible for sending energy through nerves to the muscles of the arm that move the hand—the physical reaction. But what caused the thought? If thoughts lead to actions (which include thinking), and actions lead to life experience, then life is simply a collection of thoughts. To understand how life began, all we need to know is how thought began.

Like the seemingly eternal and un-created matter that existed to allow an explosion, resulting in the Big Bang Theory, humans are also made of matter. They've always been made of matter, they are made of matter now, and they will always be made of matter, invariably. According to the Big Bang postulation, the cataclysmic explosion of a small volume of matter at extremely high density and temperature was set in motion by something either within itself or by some outside force. Regardless of where the command, or kinetic energy came from, something caused the matter to react. Did the “small amount of matter” think and cause its own explosion? Or did something outside of the matter cause the explosion? Based on what we know about ourselves and how our own brain (matter) operates, the command to create the explosion must have originated from within the matter itself. But that's assuming that the Big Bang Theory is correct. To suppose that the Big Bang occurred from an internal command of some kind implies that the matter could think on its own, without outside manipulation.

The Power of Thought

This takes us to the reality of the human form. As an infant develops inside the womb of its mother, or soon to develop, in some cases, in the artificial environment that advancements in technology will provide, its brain develops as a mass of matter. But does an infant brain inside the womb think? What a terrible thought to imagine that the brain is fully functional inside the womb! What a terrible dark and lonely place to start thinking! The fact is, the brain does not think inside the womb. It's not until the body leaves the womb and the brain becomes conscious does the brain begin to think. We now understand that thinking is responsible for the chemical reactions inside of our brains that cause physical reactions. But what caused the first chemical reaction of thought to take place? It couldn't have started from within the limited space of the brain, unless, of course, we accept that the Big Bang Theory is correct and that the “small amount of matter” commanded itself to explode. We would also have to accept that it is possible that a developing human fetus at some point has the ability to consciously think for itself inside the womb.

The first human thought after the body leaves the womb was caused by something outside of the human body. The energy that produced the very first thought, and every thought thereafter, was produced by a compendium of eternal matter that has always existed, exists, and will always exist: the human being. Human thought is the force that could have caused the “small amount of matter” to explode and create a universe, its suns, its planets, and its moons, just as the same powerful thought creates the beginning of mortal life.

The Human Being—The Most Advanced Life Form

Humans exist in only one form and in only one environment. If science can so easily accept that a “small amount of matter” existed to cause such a significant start to human life, why can’t it accept the probability that the human mind is also a “small amount of matter” with powers that originate within itself? The real truth is that humans are the most significant and powerful “amount of matter” that has ever and will ever exist. The problem in fully comprehending this important real truth is that common sense gained during this mortal experience upon this earth is limited to the experiences between the first thought of an infant after leaving the womb and the last thought before the brain turns off at death. But common sense should easily accept that something outside of the mortal brain caused the chemical reaction of thought.

As eternal human forms of matter, we are aware of our existence as the greatest life forms that exist. We are also aware that we are different than every other human. This is the purpose of existence—the purpose of life—individual power and control over our own personal environment. We ARE the gods that we suppose exist outside our mortal comprehension and experience. As these highly advanced humans, we individualize only according to the different experiences that we gain from our brains interaction within the environment in which our physical body exists.

The Game of Life

Having existed without beginning or end, the only purpose for existing as such would be to eternally perpetuate the overall reason for our existence: individualization. To individualize, we are exposed to different environments outside of our eternal state of existence that provide us with the ability to experience different environments and situations that allow us to act and be acted upon to create individual experience. In other words, to have fun and gain more individual experience, we play the most advanced game that has ever existed, and which has always existed. For want of a better name for this game, we’ll call it The Game of Life.

Whereas we have always existed in a linear environment of an infinite number of humans and space, the game provides a platform of limitations that give us the opportunity to individualize. This platform is the form of what we know as the Universe. The Universe is not linear, but spherical and consists of separate and vast expansions of space that allow unimpeded experience away from all other humans. The Universe is ever expanding, imploding and changing depending on when and how we choose to play the game. Different galaxies, solar systems, and planets provide the isolation necessary for individual play. By the power of our free will, and the incredible power of our own highly advanced brains, we enter the game any time that we want and participate with whomever we want. Owing to the fact that there exist an infinite number of humans, we never run out of fellow players or get bored of playing with the same people.

All Human Experience Is Generated In the Mind

The real truth: All of our personal experience is occurring as chemical reactions within our individual brains. These chemical reactions make us think that we are participating in an experience outside of our true self, when in reality, our eternal, advanced body never leaves the environment in which it has always been. But our advanced minds (brains) can create universes, galaxies, solar systems, and planets of new experience. This is the essence of human existence.

Although the Big Bang didn't actually happen exactly how science postulates, if an individual human wanted to create a universe in this way, it could. The power of that one brain could have easily provided the necessary energy to cause a chemical reaction that was responsible for a "cataclysmic explosion of a small volume of matter at extremely high density and temperature" that created the life experience of that individual. Whatever you can think, you can do as an advanced human being.

The Game of Life is played on two different levels inside our advanced brain but perceived as being in a completely different place than where we actually exist. The first level is a creation of a new solar system where individual experience can take place. This solar system relates to the advanced humans who control it. That's why there are an infinite number of solar systems in what we perceive as our known universe. There are an infinite number of solar systems because there are an infinite number of humans playing the game. This first level is a highly advanced level where we can experience life similar, but more individualized, to our real world. What is similar is the way that we can utilize our physical bodies to act and be acted upon in this new environment. These bodies are avatars subconsciously controlled by our true selves. These avatar<sup>3</sup> bodies are patterned after the bodies that we actually possess.

The second level is the experience that we are now having as mortal humans. This level exists to allow us the opportunity to experience an environment and experience that is in direct opposition to our existence in the first level of the game. It helps us to gain an appreciation of who we are as Advanced Humans. These two levels exist to promote and compel individualization and the creation of personalized experience, which then adds to the eternal nature of our real existence. Simply put, we are playing a game in competition with each other to see who can generate the most distinct and unique experiences. That pretty much sums up the purpose for our existence. It's all about individual self-worth.

<sup>3</sup> According to the Hindu religion, which has the closest definition to real truth, an "avatar" is a manifestation of a deity or released soul in bodily form on earth.

We are all very EQUAL Advanced Humans, and nothing we accomplish during The Game of Life on the mortal, second level, has any importance to our true reality except for the negative experiences we encounter while playing the game. Understanding the above real truth helps to understand why all the rules and laws that should govern us should be based on two basic principles:

The Message of a True Messenger—the Biblical Book of Isaiah

We are all eternal gods with equal powers and abilities and we should learn to value ourselves as the gods that we are. The second is like unto the first, value others like you do yourself. And upon these two principles, the message of all true messengers is based. Because of their knowledge of real truth, true messengers find it very difficult to deliver their message to the people of the earth. Until now, these true messengers have hidden their true identity and understanding of things and attempted to help the people of the earth find their true self by teaching within the cultures and beliefs systems that the people already accept as truth. The biblical book of Isaiah, when explained properly, is a beautiful and complete message given by a true messenger at a time when the political and social powers of the world wield control of the mortal mind. This book will be explained in its entirety in this book. The explanation of this one book should help the inquirer of truth consider that its author, above any other claimant of truth, IS a true messenger. Why? Because only a true messenger understand the real truth delivered by another true messenger.

This Book's Challenge

If the above revelations are indeed real truth, then more evidence must be provided to substantiate and increase the proof that these things actually came from a true messenger. The proof is demanded by the suspicion and paranoia of the common mind that has been deceived so many times in the past, and in most people's case, is continually being deceived currently by false messengers. It is required and incumbent upon this claimed true messenger to provide the answers that will counter many of the falsehoods created in the past and in the present by those whom he accuses.

Where did religion start? Is the Bible true? Is the Koran true? Where did all the stories and “historical” references to the world’s main religions and philosophies come from? Where and why did all the traditional practices throughout the world start? If there were other true messengers in the past, how did they interact with the people and what did they do to level the playing field during their time upon the earth? The answers to these questions must be provided! The claims of the true messenger must be challenged and examined!

This book will meet those challenges. This book will provide the answers to questions that have never been answered. And once the answer is given, none will be able to dispute its possibility and probability once the common sense and reason of the reader is applied to its understanding. As darkened and ignorant as this world may appear, and until a full exposure of the real truth becomes the daylight by which the whole world exists, one can rest assured that the hope and beauty of the night is that there is a moon that reflects the light of tomorrow. Until the morning of tomorrow comes, the world has,

The Light of the Moon.
